UK Outlook for Tuesday 24 Aug 2021 to Thursday 2 Sep 2021:

More settled than recent times during much of this period, with variable amounts of cloud, spells of sunshine and mainly light winds. It looks increasingly likely that these settled conditions will persist for much of the period, although a gradual increase in the likelihood of either showers, or more significant rain arriving from the west, is forecast, particularly in the south of the country. This change may be accompanied by stronger winds. Temperatures are likely to be a little above average for this time of the year, away from the far south where slightly cooler air and a stronger breeze will peg temperatures back to around average at first, despite the increasing amounts of sunshine.
